SAILS AND SAILMAKERS

We turn now from sails to sailmakers. The evidence of sails proves the existence of sailmakers as early as 3500 years before Christ, but we have no record of who they were or how they worked.

The Book of Acts tells us that the Apostle Paul was a tent maker. If the Jews had been a maritime people, Paul would doubtless have been a sailmaker. Indeed it is altogether probable that on his four Mediterranean voyages the skilled needle of Paul helped to mend rents in the ship's sails caused by the tempestuous Euroclydon.

Let us pass over seventeen centuries and come from the distant Mediterranean to our own Buzzards Bay. Leonard Ellis in his "History of New Bedford" says that when Joseph Rotch came from Nantucket to our shores in 1765 "He found upon his arrival a little hamlet comprising among its inhabitants Joseph Russell, John Louden, shipbuilders; Benjamin Taber, block maker and boat builder; Gideon Mosher, mechanic; Elnathan Sampson, blacksmith." If there was any sailmaker in the village at that time, he was not sufficiently important to be named.

Under the vigorous leadership of Joseph Rotch, however, whaling and its allied crafts grew rapidly. "From Dartmouth there were annually fitted (in the years) 1770-1775," says Leonard Ellis, "eighty vessels of 6,500 tonnage. Vessels were built on the Acushnet and Apponegansett Rivers, and sail lofts, rope walks, cooper shops and wharves came into existence."

If we bear in mind that all ships in those days moved only by means of sails, we will readily grant that as the shipping of New Bedford increased, the industry of sailmaking here must have grown proportionately in size and importance. In 1805 there were belonging to this port 112 vessels. By 1853 there were more than three times as many. Five years later to outfit the whalers required 205,000 yards of canvas. This indicates busy times for the sailmakers.

We have said that when Joseph Rotch came from Nantucket he found here a certain shipwright named John Louden. This John Louden in 1760 purchased from that princely land-owner Joseph Russell an acre of land on the water front south of Union Street. He constructed a wharf in line of the present Commercial Street. In 1787 Loudon sold what land he then had left to Isaac Howland, who built a candle works and distillery at the head of the wharf. The wharf was subsequently called I. & G. Howland's, and later Commercial Wharf.

On this wharf in 1836 we find the following business houses:

At number one, Charles R. Tucker, Ship Chandler and Grocer.

At number three, the counting room of that famous shipping house, Isaac Howland, Jr. & Co., whose members were then listed as Gideon Howland, Thomas Mandell, Edward Mott Robinson and others.

At the corner of Orange Street (now called Front Street) were Chapman & Bonney, Sailmakers.

At number ten, Whitney & Lindsay, Grocers and Commission Merchants.

And at an unnumbered location on I. & G. Howlands wharf was Simpson Hart, Sailmaker. Who was this sailmaker Simpson Hart and where did he come from? His paternal ancestors in the early 1640's had come from London to Taunton, then to Portsmouth, R. I. and North Dartmouth. His father, Simpson Hart Senior, was born in 1763 in the house of his father, William Hart, a large landowner of North Dartmouth.

Simpson Hart, Junior, was born in New Bedford in 1804. At the age when boys used to choose between college and going to sea, he chose to go to sea. His older sister, Sophia, had married Thomas Mandell, a partner in the firm of Isaac Howland, Jr. and Company. They owned not only whaleships, but also merchant vessels, and carried on a lucrative trade with China. In one of these China merchantmen Simpson Hart sailed. At his own request he was permitted to land at Tahiti, and to spend a year in exploring the South Sea Islands.

Later he became a master mariner in command of ships sailing to China and to Liverpool, but he gave up the sea for a very good reason.

He fell in love with Ruth Swift Briggs, daughter of a successful Boston merchant in the China trade. Ruth's family consented to the marriage only upon condition of his establishing himself in business on shore.

If he could not go to sea, he would make sails for ships. So in 1834 he obtained a location on I. & G. Howland's Wharf and erected the sign "Simpson Hart, Sailmaker." In the same year he married the lady of his heart.

From the beginning the business prospered. New Bedford, although it remained a town for thirteen years more, and did not achieve the dignity of a city until 1847, was growing by leaps and bounds.

In 1836 its population was 11,113, an increase of 47% in six years, and its citizens owned 167 whaling vessels. The directory of that year lists five sailmaking firms and twenty-six individual sailmakers.

In 1843 "Uncle Gid" Howland, in one of his sober moments, decided to build a three story granite block on the north side of Commercial Street. This was owned by Gideon Howland and his two daughters, Sylvia Ann Howland and Abby Slocum Robinson, mother of Hetty Green. They rented the top story, or loft, of the new building to Simpson Hart, Sailmaker.

TOWN RESIDENT BORN ON SITE OF WHALING MUSEUM

You may recall on our last week's issue, a picture of the Whaling Museum was on the cover. Did you know that one of our residents was born on the very site of the Whaling Museum?

Mr. George Correa of Fairhaven Rd. was born in the house that was situated on the land before the museum was built. His father, Captain John Correa, who sailed for many years from New Bedford on the whale-ships, sold the land to the Whaling Museum.

I swan whar was I it has been two solid weeks since I have had enough room to write a real good weather report and I tell you it aint easy to predick on a pin head . Wal sir I was hope in to be rescued by a beautiful injun maiden like that there Jones feller or was it Smith no twas Jones - John Jones because the gals had always took to me and now that my hair h'd grown back I cut quite a handsom figger now I tell you. Right by my elbow I heared this voice like silver bells which said take courage Extra and I will help you and impulsive feller that I am I fell deep in love quick an a wink with just the voice mind you I was never one to dilly dally So I turned my head to gaze into my swetties eyes and balls of fire!!!! After I came too I begun to shiver and shake and to try to recollect my wits and I wasn't hung up anymore but I swan I shore wished that I was. Why this gal now I don't mean to be ungentlemanly but I declare that I can't see how any gal could be as homely as this poor critter why her pore face was flat as the bottom of a skillet and her eyeballs stuck out like pool balls with all the whites a showin whar they wasn't red Well I beged her to hang me back over the fire and I kept tellin her I was mighty cold and look how I was shaking and a shiverin but she wouldn't listen but just kept a gazin into my eyes like a moon struck calf 2435&&"%#%"&%"#"
